Literally translated as “honorable spirit”, Goryō is a ghost from aristocratic classes who died tormented and agonizing. First mentions of them go back to the Heian period, they are believed to be “the spirits of powerful lords, who have been wronged, that were capable of catastrophic vengeance”. Existing solely for vengeance, Goryō are a type of ghosts that chase after those

Yurei are predominately believed to be women, because the Japanese believe that women experience deeper, stronger emotions than men and thus are more likely to become Yurei. The differences don't end there, but in order to understand the Yurei fully we must understand traditional Japanese beliefs about the afterlife.

Matt Alt calls yurei and yokai out as two separate things in his books Yokai Attack! and Yurei Attack!: The Japanese Ghost Survival Guide. (I respectfully disagree.) To me, this is the easiest question—of course, yurei are yokai. All you have to do is look at the yokai collections from the Edo period.
